VIVENDI ENTERTAINMENT ACQUIRES EXPELLED: NO INTELLIGENCE ALLOWED

Las Vegas, NV, June 25, 2008 - Vivendi Entertainment (VE) has acquired home entertainment distribution rights to Expelled: No Intelligence Allowed, produced by Premise Media. The announcement was made today by Tom O'Malley, President, Vivendi Entertainment and John Sullivan, Executive Producer, Expelled.

Expelled: No Intelligence Allowed, starring journalist and actor Ben Stein, is an independent documentary film that explores the theory of Intelligent Design. The film examines the conflict between advocates of intelligent design and evolutionists, and the hostility of the scientific community towards scientists that embrace intelligent design.

"Ben Stein brings his unique perspective to this controversial topic and creates an incredibly insightful and entertaining film," commented O'Malley. "Expelled is one of the most successful theatrical documentary films ever released and we are delighted to continue to expand its audience."

"We are very excited to have Vivendi Entertainment as a partner for the home entertainment release," said Sullivan. "They have built a great brand and reputation within the industry."

On Tuesday, June 24, 2008, Stein was honored by The Entertainment Merchants Association (EMA) during their Home Media Expo 2008 in Las Vegas. Stein received EMA's "Freedom of Expression" Award for his articulate expositions of his economic and political beliefs, which often run contrary to the prevailing Hollywood orthodoxy.

The film will be distributed by VE to all retail Home Entertainment outlets including Television, Home Video and Digital.
